SECTION—II

(Composition)

4. Teaching kids to have compassion and empathy for their furry, feathered and finned friends is vital for preventing cruelty to animals as well as in raising them to respect and treat those who are different from them with kindness.

According to the National PTA Congress, "Children trained to extent justice, kindness, and mercy to animals become more just, kind, and considerate in their relations to each other. Character training along these lines will result in men and women of broader sympathies; more humane, more law-abiding, in every respect more valuable citizens."

Since young children naturally identify with animals, and because animals are living beings like us, we can use our interactions with animals to teach children how to behave towards other people. Teaching our kids to respect and protect even the smallest and most despised among us is one of the most important life lessons that we can pass along to them. It helps them learn to value one another and it prevents violence. Incorporating simple concepts of kindness and respect into kids' daily lives is simple and fun. The easiest and most important way to teach your little ones empathy is to lead by example.

Decades of evidence show that a child's attitude towards animals can predict future behaviour. According to published reports, in every highly publicized school shooting, one warning sign appeared consistently: All the young killers abused or killed animals before turning on their classmates.
